Continue the Discussion Online

In order to encourage and facilitate the exchange of ideas, the American Economic Journals invite AEA members and contributing authors to participate in online discussion forums. Here you can discuss, ask questions, or post teaching materials, PowerPoint presentations, working papers, datasets, or other materials related to the articles published in any of our four quarterly journals.

Joining the discussion is simple. Go to any American Economic Journal listed on the AEA Journals home page www.aeaweb.org/journals to search and view articles. Visit the summary record and find the "comments" tab to participate in the forum for that particular article.

Tools for your success!

A convenient resource for students, economists, educators, and more.

A photograph of a silver Acer laptop on a wooden desk. The laptop screen shows the American Economic Association (AEA) website. The website has a header with the AEA logo and navigation links. A large banner on the screen reads 'RESERVE PUNK' and 'Applications open for the AEA Summer Program'. Below the banner, there are several articles and a sidebar with links to 'All Galleries', 'All Publications', 'All Journals', and 'All Books'. To the left of the laptop, there are some papers and a smartphone.

RESEARCH HIGHLIGHTS

A Convenient Way to Monitor Key Economics Research and Emerging Topics Published in AEA Journals

The American Economic Association now publishes a weekly "Research Highlights" feature on its website, covering timely and interesting economics research from its line of flagship scholarly publications.

Coverage is tailored to assist academics, policymakers, and journalists who may not have time to stay abreast of the latest published articles. AEA Research Highlights is also an accessible way for the general public to understand academic research via summaries, interactive links and graphs, photos, and presentations of lessons drawn from research.
